$514,000,000 IN ROAD BONDS

On November 2, when Missouri voted on and approved the proposition for an issue of $60,000,000 in road bonds for the State there were several other states voting on similar propositions. In Minnesota, an issue of $75,000,000 was approved; in West Virginia, $50,000,000; in Colorado, $5,000,000; in Idaho, $2,000,000. During the two years preceding the election, twelve states voted issues which amounted in total to $272,900,000. Adding that amount to the recent issues authorized, which totaled $192,000,000, there is a total bond issue of $464,900,000 authorized for road building purposes in different sections of the United States. In addition to this, Virginia has taken the preliminary steps toward authorizing an issue of $30,000,000, which would bring the figure up to $514,000,000.

Considering the fact that this money is to be matched by the Federal Government, dollar for dollar, it is seen that there is a fund of more than one billion dollars for the purpose.

This is the first time in the history of the country that such a broad program for road building has been entered upon. It is beginning on a national scale and the results of this program will not, in all probability, be fully seen before another program of equal magnitude or larger will have been put under way for other states.

Perhaps the reason Monday is so blue is that Sunday is too pink.

COLUMBIA PUBLIC LIBRARY

American cities large or small are noted for their public libraries accessible to all classes of people. This is our advantage over European towns. But Columbia, with a sobriquet of "Athens of Missouri," does not do justice to her civic standing with her insignificant public library. It is true that the University Library ranks high among libraries of the country, but to this institution only our students and faculty members and their families go to read and tote out books. The town's people make little use of it.

Columbia has a population of more than 10,000 and her public library situated in an inconspicuous place remains almost unknown by the people. We need a bigger one. We need a library where adults and children could pass their leisure time reading.

There are persons in the city who are willing to contribute to a fund with which to start a city library. Carnegie funds are always ready to back up a move of this kind. The plan should receive the warmest support from everybody.

The public library is an institution where popular knowledge is deposited. It is an index of a progressive city or town, and by it one can judge the character, industry and education of the people in a community. In all cases a good library is a civic asset, the value of which cannot be expressed in terms of dollars.

PASSING THE BUCK

Since the close of the late World War a number of German leaders have rushed into print to tell the world just how

Germany lost the war and to add that if their particular advice had been followed the defeat would have been turned into victory. The list continues to grow and now there should be added the name of Matthias Erzberger, head of the German delegation that negotiated the armistice.

The new author's book, as reviewed by the New York Times, tells how he was opposed to the policy that permitted Italy to come into the war; how he was against the course followed towards Romania and how he bitterly fought the peace of Brest-Litovsk. The burden of his plea, however, is concerned with his opposition to the ruthless submarine war, because it was certain to force the United States into the conflict. He takes pains to vindicate Chancellor Bethmann von Hellweg and Ambassador von Bernstorff, both of whom opposed the submarine campaigning and the latter of whom was engaged with President Wilson in a serious move for peace when the ruthless campaign started.

Erzberger says the war was lost because of the ruthless submarine war, while Tripitz says defeat resulted because it was not sufficiently ruthless. Ludendorff blames the collapse of civilian morale for the collapse of the German lines in France, while Erzberger places the blame on the naval and military authorities. Ludendorff blames Bernstorff and Bernstorff blames the leaders at home, and the story grows with the telling.

There has been some little discussion between the allied countries as to just who won the war; but certainly it was quite a task for the German student of the future to figure out just who lost the war.

FISHING IN MISSOURI

Missouri has one good state fish hatchery, the Forest Park hatchery. Many of our sister states have from five to ten. Practically every state in the Union has a fish license law. We are the exception. The other states use the money derived from the fish licenses to carry on propagation and planting of fish in the waters of their states as well as to patrol the streams and protect the fish.

Tina Birmingham, at the conclusion of a fifteen month service as state game and fish commissioner, wrote in his late report: "Born and reared in the Ozark section, early in life I had cultivated the love for sport. Hunting and fishing in the pastime of the boys who live there, and they naturally love the wild. This recreation of the state is truly the Switzerland of America. Many people go far miles for hunting and recreation and leave behind them far more beautiful mountain scenery than they find on their vacation. When the people of this state realize what we have here, they will cease to leave home for the Adirondacks, the Catskills and other extensively advertised resorts—and in turn thousands of pleasure seekers from the outside will catch the spirit and spend their summers with us. Every mountain stream south of the Osage River to the Arkansas line furnishes the best of fishing. Possibly no other state in the union has so many miles of mountain water where the big and little mouth black bass, crappie, jack and other game fish abound. True, they are not so plentiful now as they were in former years, for we have not worked the streams as we should, but we have done the best we could under the circumstances. We are looking forward to a general plan, whereby these streams as well as every other stream in the state, may be stocked with every species of fish that will thrive in their waters. With a conservative fish license law, this can be done without one cent of expense to the taxpayer of the state, since the fishermen and hunters of Missouri will furnish the resource sufficient not only to protect but to propagate.

"We have already lost species of game and fish for lack of the protection that should have been given years ago when Missouri was known as one of the best hunting grounds in the Middle West. "No state in the union is better situated or more adapted to the wants and needs of wild life than Missouri. Under the present plans of propagation the prairie chicken, once so numerous, is coming back. The deer are almost gone from the state, yet they thrive well under plans of conservative propagation. With the establishment of some state game preserves, we can easily bring them back as in their old-time herds.

With two exceptions, every state in the Union charges nonresidents a license tax for fishing. All but eleven impose a license fee on their residents for the privilege. The Missouri Fish Commission urges every farmer to build a pond and raise fish.

Many Faculty Members Are at Work Preparing New Books

Faculty members of the University have in process of preparation at least thirty books at the present time. Most of these are not mere enough completion for any announcement to be made.

Dr. N. M. Trevelyan will have a book to press upon the next year containing a historic research on English monastic heresies. This book will be published in the Harvard Historical Studies. It will be a story of the rise, decay and development of monasticism in the close of the reign of Henry VIII. Another book which Dr. Trevelyan is preparing is a textbook which will be published by the Macmillan Company. The title is "Political and Social History of Europe to 1800," and is designed to preserve the volumes of a similar title by Hayes. It begins with the fall of the Roman Empire.

Prof. R. J. Keener, also of the history department, is preparing the history of the family. He is writing a book on the history of the family. It will be a survey of the family and its progress from 1845 to the present time. Another book by Dr. Keener will be entitled "Contemporary Problems in Social Science," which will be a survey of the social works of the social sciences in Europe with special attention to contemporary conditions.

BEST STORY OF THE DAY

"Mother," said John Worth, after he had finished their simple noonday meal. "I can see no way out of it except to use the money that the turkeys bring for the taxes."

"Oh, John," said his wife in a disappointed voice, "I had been planning to use that money to buy a phonograph for the children's Christmas."

"I know that you have, dear," replied her husband, "but I have been to the bank this morning and it is impossible to borrow money and will be for some time. The market is off on everything and I did not get anywhere near what I had expected for the stock that I sold, you know. Besides, Lucille's expenses at high school have been considerable."

Mrs. Worth took a handful of dishes from the table and went into the kitchen to conceal her disappointment. Her husband followed her after a few moments and found her poking the fire in preparation for heating the dinner. He caressed her gently, then hurried outside to his work.

It was late in November in the fall of 1907 and the panic had made money matters especially tight. Mrs. Worth, assisted by 9-year-old Johnny, had worked with the greatest care all through the summer caring for the turkeys. Lucille, the oldest of the four children, had finished country school and was at a town fifteen miles distant attending her first year of high school. The three others were still going to the little country school.

Mrs. Worth was anxious to make the home on the farm at the foot of the Ozarks as attractive for her children as possible.

Like most children they were fond of the phonograph, and it had been Mrs. Worth's ambition from the time she saw the turkey eggs in the spring to buy a phonograph with the money. When she saw that the prospects of raising a flock were good, she let little Johnny in on the secret. How his eyes had shined!

The secret was too good for Johnny to keep, so he told the rest of the children what was to be done with the "turkey money." All the children, even Lucille away at high school, looked forward to Christmas and the joy that was to be brought into the home by the phonograph.

Mrs. Worth's eyes were dimmed by tears as she washed the dishes; still, as she looked through the window that looked afternoon and saw her husband in his shabby coat as he scooped off the load of corn that he had just brought in from the field, she knew that he would never have asked her to make the sacrifice if he could have devised any other way to secure the money he must have with which to pay his taxes.

The afternoon wore on and at 4:30 o'clock the children came from school. It was Mrs. Worth's custom to take a few minutes off from her work when they came home each day to sit down and greet them. This day her heart was heavy, but she concealed it as best she could. After each of the children had been to the pantry to get something to eat, Mrs. Worth told them that it was necessary for papa to use the money that the turkeys would bring to pay the taxes with that year.

Charles, the oldest boy, looked very solemn, little Susie began to cry and Johnny's eyes filled with tears but he went on out to help his father and older brother with the chores. Later in the evening, he stopped after putting an armful of wood into the woodbox in the kitchen, slipped up to his mother and his arms about her neck and said: "It's all right about the phonograph, mamma. Sister will be home and we'll have a Christmas anyway. Besides, we can buy one with next year's turkey money; may be."
